LITERATURE OF THE DAY.

single-handed for the English language some twenty years before. However, the end was to come. The Abbe Gaultier and the Cure de St. Salpice squabbled over the dying old man-who was to have the honor of the conversion? There were references to the Archbishop. Were the documents to which they had combined to extract his signature valid and binding? They were just like a parcel of sharp lawyers taking evidence upon commission. The poor old see plainly, gentlemen, he has not his head." If not, what was the Cure doing there? He lingered till late in the evening of May 30, 1778. At 11 p. m. he said to his valet: "Adleu, my dear Moraud; I am dying "-and ten minutes, afterward he passed away peacefully, aged eighty-three years 24th St., adjoining 5th Ave. Hotel, six months nine days. It was the opinion gem that his friends got him buried "in the Abbey of Scellieres, in Champague, more than a hundred miles from Paris. It was even proposed to disinter the body, which of Romillesur-Seine till, on July 10, 1791,
